How games are sent through cable TV:

1. All the game data is placed on CD-ROM. The data stream is looped and sent out.

Because the data takes up little bandwidth, cable companies can provide Sega Channel without removing any current channels.

2. The data signal is sent out via antenna to a Hughes Galaxy Communications satellite, which bounces the signal back to local cable companies that offer Sega Channel.

3. The local cable company receives, interprets and sends the signal to subscribers.

4. A special adapter rented out to subscribers decodes the signal. A game can be downloaded within one to two minutes.

By the numbers:

Average subscriber age: 19.2
Gender: 83% male, 17% female
Percent rating games from good to excellent: 74%
Avg. games tried/month: 31.2

Sega Channel puts new spin on gamers' habits

Why buy when you can try?

That's what Sega's been saying about the Sega Channel, and gamers have been listening.

Since its national debut in December of 1994, the video game channel has gained mass appeal. While Sega won't release exact subscriber numbers until the end of this month, the service has set up shop in major cities, such as Denver, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Philadelphia, Houston and Washington, D.C., just to name a few. The New York-based Sega Channel has the potential to reach more than 12 million homes.

In addition, a survey in Sports Illustrated for Kids showed kids are five times more likely to buy into the Sega Channel than buy a new console, Sega officials said.

"There's been an overwhelming response to the Sega Channel," spokesperson Jennifer Moffie said. "It's been very successful."

In a nutshell, Sega Channel lets gamers download and play video games for the Sega Genesis. Up to 50 games are offered, and the titles change monthly. The monthly service ranges from $12-20 per month, with a one-time additional charge for an adapter that hooks up to the Genesis.

According to gamers, the interactive service has changed their playing and buying habits. Most notable is that Sega Channel subscribers are renting less from video game stores.

"You don't have to go anywhere to get the game through Sega Channel," said Jason Brown, 18, of Las Vegas. "You don't have to worry about returning the game, or paying a late fee." In addition, players don't have to worry about games that don't work because of dirty connectors.

Gamers say the "Test Drive" section—the video game equivalent of an all-you-can-eat buffet—actually prompts them to buy more. Once they get a taste of the game, they're hungry for more. More importantly, the Sega Channel eliminates fear of a "letdown" because gamers can immediately find out if a particular game is suited to their tastes.

Added to that are special events that tie into hot new games. Recent promotions have included demos of Primal Rage and Mortal Kombat 3, as well as a special Earthworm Jim contest.

"Before, I never played with my Sega—it was all dusty," said Gino Guzzardo, 14, of Mundelein, Ill. "I had games that after I beat them, I didn't play anymore. But [now that I get] Sega Channel, I play a lot [because so many more games are offered]."

The channel's future looks bright, as Sega strengthens its ranks of subscribers through market growth. In September, Sega announced new partners that will help market the cable service in Canada.

The logical next step for Sega is putting Saturn games on the channel; however, no specific timeline has been announced yet. "Our product development team is researching the compatibility [of the Saturn]," said Moffie, who added that a new adapter will need to be developed to accommodate Saturn games.

More info on Sega and Sega Channel can be found at the company's World Wide Web site: <http://www.segaa.com>.

IT'S VIRTUALLY A NEW DEAL

Nintendo has chopped the retail price of its embattled 32-Bit Virtual Boy from $179.95 to $159.95 in hopes of enticing more gamers to buy into the system.

Officially, Nintendo officials cited an improved yen/dollar ratio as the reason behind the price cuts. However, it seems more like an attempt to bolster flagging sales. Support for this way of thinking comes from Japan, where some retailers have slashed the Virtual Boy price to a nearly rock-bottom $99.

The price cuts coincide with the release of five new titles from Nintendo earlier this year: Mario Clash, Wario Land, Golf, Vertical Force and Panic Bomber.

Nintendo plans to introduce a new controller/cable for the Virtual Boy, according to a company spokesperson. With the hook-up, two Virtual Boy players will be able to compete head to head. A release is scheduled for early 1996.

IN THE ZONE

A miniature virtual-reality system for $30?

What's red and black, has a controller and cartridges and provides a game-play experience most people have never seen before in their life?

Virtual Boy? Sure, but now there are two answers to that question.

Enter the R-Zone from Tiger Electronics. At first glance, the R-Zone appears to be a full-fledged system: The screen and speaker are housed in a small box that you strap on your head. Connected to the box is a multi-button controller.

The R-Zone actually uses cartridges that plug into the box. The game screen is projected onto clear plastic, making the image appear to float in air. It takes a little while for your eyes to adjust to the view.

While the red-shaded displays aren't even in the same league as the Virtual Boy's immersive experience, the R-Zone is less bulky and less expensive. That makes it an ideal travel accessory for those who enjoy LCD-type games. (However, be prepared for lots of curious onlookers once you strap this puppy on.)

The system sells with one game for $29.99 and runs on four AAA batteries. Additional cartridges are sold separately, including Batman Forever, Judge Dredd, VR Troopers, Virtual Fighter, Mortal Kombat 3 and Daytona USA.

T*HQ, I-Motion to intro PlayStation titles

T*HQ's push into 32-Bit games has received a boost from I-Motion Interactive, with which it has inked a publishing deal. The first game in the works is Alone in the Dark: One-Eyed Jack's Revenge. This sequel is due out in the first quarter of 1996 for the Sony PlayStation and shortly afterward for the Sega Saturn. Another title due out in 1996 for both platforms is Chaos Control, a 3-D flight sim.

The first glimpses (above) of the sequel to Alone in the Dark for the PlayStation boast richly detailed scenes.

JACK BROS.

Traverse through the many levels in this game.

Jack Bros. is an interesting maze game for the Virtual Boy. There are 90 levels of adventure, each with a specific theme. Some of them include a maze of anatomy, a mechanical castle and a cave.

The Jack brothers have only a few minutes to escape each maze, leaving them little time to battle the various monsters and traps set in their path.

This game is fast-paced and loaded with levels to explore.

Cyberdillo is a first-person action game that arms you with plungers instead of guns. The enemies are cute-looking creatures that follow you through the rooms.

Cyberdillo looks rather weak visually, with large pixels and few colors. However, you might enjoy its zany theme.

Think of it as a game along the lines of a non-hopping Jumping Flash.
