

Virtual Boy Games Explosion!

Dragon Hopper: it looks, er, pretty red and black to me.

On any other machine two games released on the same day would surely be overlooked but on the Virtual Boy, it's time to get excited...

Dragon Hopper

Dragon Hopper gives the player the chance to take on the role of Dorn, a jumping dragon, whose quest is to seek out the help of the fairies and find the King, Queen and love Diana who have been kidnapped by a power hungry Prime Minister.

The game itself is a platformer although, strangely, the view is from overhead as opposed to side-on which Nintendo hope will provide some necessary dramatic effect. Certainly, it will be interesting to see how the full version plays.

As with any standard platformer there are plenty of secret rooms and hidden stages to be found as well as what Nintendo have labelled an 'Element of Discovery' mode which allows Dorn to wander through each level in search of a special star which teleports him to the next level.

The seeking of stars in Dragon Hopper bears no relation to the rubbish Stars in Her Eyes on VHS.

There are also numerous puzzles to be solved and Dorn must find keys to progress through the level. The game will be available on August 26 in America and a European version is expected to follow.

Bound High

The player takes the role of Chalvo in Bound High, a game featuring full 3D motion. The main character is a bouncing robot (?) who travels through space in pursuit of alien invaders that threaten the peace and harmony of Earth.

Bound High, viewed once again from an overhead angle, involves Chalvo landing on enemies and destroying them whilst avoiding the many hazards that make themselves readily available such as deep crevices, sharp spikes and highly charged electric shockers.

You ARE the bouncy robot larging it in Bound High. But you can't wait!

There are four modes of play in all. The first is Score Attack in which players strive to achieve the highest possible scores in the Universe. The second is Adventure mode which utilizes unique platform configurations and guardian characters as well as Random play which involves Chalvo challenging against varying degrees of difficulty. And, lastly, there is the Focker and Cushions option which combines miniature golf and billiards though quite what relevance this has to saving Earth from demented forces of evil, we don't know.

Nintendo hope it will offer a substantial challenge and, like Dragon Hopper, Bound High will see the light of day on August 26.

Such an object brings to mind that other toy - the space HOPPER. Great fun (when you're live).

WHAT A CARRY ON!

Top innuendo action could be yours if you enter our competition to win videos of two classic comedies - Carry On Screaming and Carry On Teacher.

Both are brilliant and we've got five copies of each to give away, so if you fancy winning a pair (...Oooh, matron), just answer this simple question -

These videos could be yours - all you need to do is answer our brain teaser above.

Which star of many a Carry On movie now stars in BBC's EastEnders?
Just answer down on a postcard and send it to: Carry On Super Play, 30 Monmouth Street, Bath BA1 2BW. Entries to arrive in the Super Play office no later than 18th July.

Frying tonight!

Twelve of the Carry On films have just been released on video by Warner Home Video and are available for £4.99 each.

